AMERICAN SOCIETY
FOR INDUSTRIAL SECURITY

On January 21, 1955, the American Society for Industrial Security (ASIS) was organized to answer the need for a national society uniting industrial security officials into one recognized professional association. Presently, the Society has a national membership of more than 2300, with chapters in 58 cities. Each year, the Society holds a national seminar to bring together both members and guests who want to share, evaluate, and extend knowledge in the various aspects of the Industrial Security field.

The 8th National Seminar is dedicated to an effective channeling of security information to meet current and future needs because industrial security has a vital and expanding role in insuring that America—what it is and what it stands for—survives.
